German Research School
for Simulation Sciences

Reference Form

for the Master's program for the doctoral program

The Master's and the doctoral program of the German Research School for Simulation Sciences are open to a limited number of extremely well-qualified students with a substantial background in their proposed field of study. The German Research School for Simulation Sciences is dedicated to advanced research and education in the applications and methods of computer simulation in science and engineering. It combines the specific strengths of its founders, RWTH Aachen University and Forschungszentrum Jülich, in the fields of science, engineering, and high-performance computing. Application areas include materials science, mechanical engineering, physics, chemistry, geo and life sciences, mathematics, and computer science.
